

Abstract

5 A deformation element, in particular for use in motor vehicles, comprises a first base part and a second base part. The first base part includes at least one protrusion which tapers starting from the first base part. The second base part includes at least one recess which tapers from a front side to a rear side thereof and is associated to the protrusion.